Racing, Karl and Katy leaped breathlessly as they stumbled upon the cobbles in the supermarket car park. Surprised, as if it was synchronised they both looked up in fear at a cubal, seemed to them like the biggest human eating monster that they had ever encountered, however we all knew it was the supermarket. Kenny ran into destroy the human race but how could they ever find him in this tower stacked with humans?

As they stood before the imposing automatic doors their desperation shone like the stars in the midnight sky. They simply must get through to prevent Kenny from hurting him or any one else, but they had no idea how to achieve this unachievable goal. Seconds later, Karl found a solution they needed to jump in front of the sensor before another human arrived. It was now or never.

With endless effort from both Karl and Katy they sprang up until the doors opened, their jaws dropped onto the shining, sparkling floor at the sight of the moving staircase for lazy people who couldn't attempt to walk. The human icy, frosty cupboards were breathtaking and seemed a little bit cold as cold as the heart of the devil. They found the human teleporting machine mind blowing, magical and out of this world. However, the most horrible sight on their horizon was the horrendous display of crusty weapons. They prayed, hoped and wished that the giant humans would never use these against them.

Kenny deviously strolled in the direction of the snow and ice stacked frosty freezers full of food. It was every child's paradise. Delighted, he saw the ideal opportunity, humans. Exiledly, he approached his target getting his fists ready, waiting for the next human to open the freezer, Kenny practiced punching the air. Moments later, a human opened the freezer whilst Kenny dove to the bananas like an olympian diver winning a gold medal. Heart-beating excitedly. His fists rose. Bananas bruised. However, Kenny began to stiffen...

Desperately, Karl and Katy started to worry. They had been searching for what seemed like forever. Amazingly, the sight they had been looking for appeared out of the blue. Kenny was attached to the shelf with bruised bananas. Excitedly, Katy and Karl rapidly ran towards Kenny right away. To their horror they had discovered that something was not right. Kenny wasn't moving and was stood extremely still on the very top shelf. He was frozen stiff, with his arms in midair just about to touch the banana. Karl rushed up the freezer shelves without being noticed whilst Katy was looking for something to warm him up. He grasped ^{Kenny's} ~~his~~ arms and tugged as hard as possible. Suddenly, snap! Kenny was free. The Kangaroos fell to the ground where Katy was patiently waiting. Kenny was still frozen with fear in his eyes. Quickly, Katy began to warm him up.

Katy and Karl fought for breath as they heard Kenny out of the shocking shop. Luckily, they succeeded at their task of escaping this building of fear without being in sight of humans. As they located themselves into the steaming sun, Kenny began to defrost like snow melting after the sun came out. Kenny was usually so angry however, that time he was tearfully trembling. Karl thundered in fury at Kenny's reckless action. To their surprise Kenny, the foolish Kangaroo, sorrowfully apologised for risking his cousin's lives. Karl and Katy were touched by his apology but also suspicious as he knew this would not be the last time he would
